“The holiday season is a time for storytelling, and whether you are hearing the story of a candlebra staying lit for more than a week or a baby born in a barn without proper medical supervision, these stories often feature miracles.”

— Lemony Snicket, A Lump of Coal

Celebrating Traditions

The chill in the air. The first wispy snowflakes falling. The late afternoon sunsets. It's holiday time again! And that means it's time to celebrate our holiday traditions.

Why are traditions important to us? The word "tradition" may imply old ways of doing things – but traditions can change and grow over time. Traditions are activities or actions that we can treasure, that make us rejoice, that bring us closer to other people.

Whether you're dancing in a Celtic celebration, or lighting the Hanukkah candles, or singing favorite songs, our holiday traditions connect us to where we came from, and help us to define who we are today. A tradition may be part of a family history, or a symbol of a long friendship. A tradition can be a community gathering that evokes warmth and light through a shared experience.

As we follow our own traditions or create new ones this holiday season, it's the perfect time to look back with nostalgia and forward with hope.
